of care at a resident level. Autonomy over residents' daily routines, shifts, and staff levels is critical to improve care. For enhancing the quality of care; it is necessary to connect actions and efforts of the national home level to monitor and reverse care plans, policies, procedures, and protocols continuously.

The first step should address (1) the creation of circumstances by the central government. This includes efforts to address the following:

1. The regulation of care standards by the central government.
2. The creation of a comprehensive understanding of special care in detail, and a variety of review systems, which require additional resources and areas of care in depth, and a variety of review systems, which require additional resources and areas of care in detail, and a variety of review systems, which require additional resources and areas of care in detail.
3. The regulation of care standards by the central government.
4. The creation of a comprehensive understanding of special care in detail, and a variety of review systems, which require additional resources and areas of care in detail.

In long-term care settings in Japan, this report will discuss quality improvement efforts in U.S. nursing homes. The quality of care provided to elderly individuals is one of the major concerns amid long-term care facilities. For the purpose of determining methods for enhancing the quality of care, we need to provide additional resources and areas of care in detail.

Y.A. SAWADA and Kearaun KONDO

FOCUSING ON THE STATE SURVEYS AND NURSING HOME REVIEWS